

ABSTRACT

A heating, ventilating or air-conditioning system, particularly for motor vehicles, operates to control the outflow characteristics of an air outflow vent. The outflow characteristics of the air outflow vent is adjustable in a controllable fashion between a first characteristic with a scatter character, a second characteristic with a spot character or an intermediate position between the scatter character and spot character.